

Multiple Choice (10 marks)

1. Intestinal failiure:
 - (a) Always requires parenteral nutritional suport
 - (b) May follow colectomy
 - (c) Is always permanent
 - (d) May benefit from sodium supplementation of ≥ 90 mmol/l
2. Which of the following nutritional interventions has been shown to improve child development?
 - (a) Protein-energy supplementation during pregnancy
 - (b) Protein-energy supplementation during the first two years
 - (c) Both of the interventions
 - (d) None of the interventions
3. Which of these factors increases the risk for cancer of the stomach?
 - (a) Obesity
 - (b) Sugar
 - (c) Salt and salt-preserved foods
 - (d) Dietary fibre
4. Normal growth can be defined as BMI between:
 - (a) 75 th and 2 nd BMI centile
 - (b) 91 st and 2 nd BMI centile
 - (c) 99.6 th and 0.4 th BMI centile
 - (d) 75 th and 25 th BMI centile
5. Which of the following is not a reason for following a vegetarian diet?
 - (a) Religious belief
 - (b) For better health
 - (c) To reduce global carbon dioxide and methane emissions
 - (d) None of the options given are correct

True / False (10 marks)

Answer True or False

6. True or False: A diet low in fats has no impact on cognitive health and does not affect cognitive decline.
7. True or False: The elderly need the most protein-dense food to maintain their health and muscle mass.
8. True or False: Malnutrition in older adults is associated with increased mortality and morbidity.
9. True or False: mRNA is a type of coding RNA that carries genetic information for protein synthesis.
10. True or False: DNMT 1 is the enzyme that copies methylation marks from the parental to the daughter strand of DNA during replication.

Long Form Response (20 marks)

Answer each question with a clear and complete explanation.

11. Discuss the relationship between vegetarian diets and the prevalence of various diseases, focusing specifically on respiratory diseases and their frequency among vegetarians.
12. Discuss how vitamin K deficiency affects the blood clotting process and analyze the implications of prolonged clotting time on overall health.

End of Paper